Difference between unbelievers who sin and believers who sin.

The difference between and unbeliever sinning and a Christian sinning is the difference between a man transgressing the laws of ... [the] State, and ... a husband [who] has done something he should not do in his relationship with his wife. He is not breaking the law, he is wounding the heart of his wife. That is the difference. It is no longer a legal matter, it is a matter of personal relationship and ... love. The man does not cease to be the husband [legally, in that instance]. Law does not come into the matter at all ... in a sense it is now something much worse than a legal condemnation. I would rather offend against a law of the land objectively outside me, than hurt someone whom I love... [In that case] You have sinned, of course, but you have sinned against love ... [so] You may and you should feel ashamed, but you should not feel condemnation, because to do so is to put yourself back 'under the law.'"
